Lee captures queen title, 'dead week' vote contested

By Greg Friel

The Homecoming Queen was elected Thursday but the results of the "dead week" referendum still hinges on 22 contested ballots.

Kathryn E. Lee, St. Albans senior, was chosen queen.

Ballots contested in the "dead week" referendum resulted when 22 students were allowed to vote without activity cards.

Election Commissioner Michael L. Queen, Clarksburg freshman, said that the students were allowed to vote because their names were listed on the computer printout sheet of full-time students.

"I don't want to release any results until we have the exact information," Queen said.

He said that the tallies on the referendum are so close the 22 contested ballots could determine the outcome.

Election regulations prevent him from releasing the information until all questions and disputes have been settled, he said.

Queen said that the names of the 22 people who voted the contested ballots would be checked in the registrar's office today to verify their status as full-time students. He said he expected the vote to be made official today.

Student Senate President James A. Dodrill, who opposed the "dead week" proposal, said he was upset at the refusal of Queen to release the results.

"I'd like to know what he is trying to pull," Dodrill, Huntington senior, said.

Student Body President Marc E. Williams, who helped draw up the "dead week" proposal, said he understood why the results of the referendum were not released by Queen.

"I'd like to know the results, but I'm not going to interfere with Mike Queen's decision," Williams, Huntington senior, said. "I guess I could order him to release them but I decided not to because that would defeat the purpose of having an election commissioner."

Opinions differ concerning $11,000 fees

By Greg Friel

Student Government received $11,000 in Higher Education Resource Fees that should go to the academic departments, according to Dr. Walter C. Felty, chairman of the educational media department.

"In my opinion, giving $11,000 of the HERF money to Student Government violates the HERF regulations," he said.

State legislation requires money from these fees, paid by all students at the university, be used for libraries, library supplies and for "the improvement in quality and scope of student services."

Marshall has received about $1.4 million from these fees.

Student Body President Marc E. Williams said that $11,000 is not given to Student Government, as Felty said.

Instead, the money is budgeted to Student Affairs, and a committee of Student Government officials acts in an advisory role on decisions involving the distribution of the money to student organizations, he said.

Williams, Huntington senior, said that ultimate control of the money remains with Dr. Nell C. Bailey, dean of Student Affairs.

Felty said his department is in need of money from Marshall's HERF fund to purchase instructional materials. He said there has not been the increase he expected in his department budget.

"You won't find a department—with the possible exception of some in the medical school—that has the money needed to buy the materials necessary to do a good job," Felty said.

"And now suddenly the administration is handing out $11,000 when they feel like it."

Felty sent a letter to the Budget and Appropriations Committee questioning the allocation of money to Student Affairs and the involvement of Student Government in distributing this money.

The committee serves as an advisory group to the university administration in budgetary matters and is supposed to report any "irregularities" in the budgetary process to the faculty, Chairman W. Donald Williams said.

In his letter to the committee, Felty said. "My understanding is that such funds (HERF money) are to be utilized solely for the purchase of materials and equipment for classroom and laboratory instruction."

"My own feeling is that HERF monies should go to academic departments . . . period."

The committee decided in a meeting Wednesday that the action was proper under the legislation guidelines.

Senate president calls statements 'ridiculous'

By Brent Archer

Remarks made by Dr. Sam Clagg in a Parthenon article concerning low turnouts for Student Government elections were "ridiculous," according to James A. Dodrill, student senate president.

Dodrill, Huntington senior, said he disagreed with Clagg's statement that making announcements during classes periods to encourage students to vote was ineffective to increase participation in elections.

"Many department heads told me that reminding students during classes to vote was an excellent idea," he said. "What better way is there to communicate?"

Dodrill said he thought Clagg was wrong in saying students and faculty had separate governments with differing interests.

"That is a ridiculous statement," he said.

Dodrill said the interests of the faculty and Student Government must coincide if the university is to operate effectively.

"Our goals are to improve education, student life and anything else that will make this university a better institution," he said. "If we're on different ends of the spectrum, I'd like to know what the goals of the faculty are."

Failure by the faculty to announce the Oct. 1 election during classes was only part of the reason Student Government blamed faculty for the low turnout, Dodrill said.

"It's just another example of their lack of cooperation," he said. "We have never received any cooperation on programs we've initiated or stances we've taken."

Dodrill said Student Government made numerous attempts to increase cooperations from faculty but had little success.

"We just haven't been able to reach them, and we've tried," he said.

Dodrill said the faculty as a whole did not take Student Government seriously, and until that attitude was changed, a lack of cooperation between the two groups would continue.

"It's a wall we can't seem to tear down," Dodrill said. "Unless they get it through their heads that we're working for the students, there is no chance for improvement."

Mountain Mardi Gras kaleidoscope of activities

By Vicki Aleshire

Homecoming week 1981, "Marshall's Mountain Mardi Gras," will feature entertainment, the crowning of the queen and her court, an acrobatic circus, an MU alumnus-now mentalist and a Mardi Gras Ball at the Huntington Civic Center.

At noon, Monday, on the Memorial Student Center Plaza, the 1981 Homecoming Queen and her court will be crowned.

At 1 p.m., on the plaza, Craig Karges, an MU alumnus, will return for his yearly performance as a mentalist.

The Michael Murphey Band will perform at the Smith Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Monday. Tickets must be picked up in advance and are free with an MU ID and activity card.

Loco-Motion, an acrobatic vaudeville team, will perform on the Plaza at noon Tuesday.

At 8 p.m. in the Multi-Purpose Room of the MSC, Jimmie "J.J." Walker will

Resident advisers must ask approval for student activities

Resident advisers now will have to seek approval from the Residence Life Office before becoming involved in student activities.

Elain Mitchell, Director of Residence Life, said, "The measure is designed to prevent Marshall's 65 resident advisers from spreading themselves too thin by becoming involved in too many activities in addition to overseeing a resident hall floor."

Any resident adviser who wants to participate in a student activity must seek approval through their head resident. The head resident is to pass the request on to the area coordinator who contacts Mitchell. She makes the final decision.

The current adviser contract does not allow anyone to be a member of Student Government, Residence Hall Government Association, Panhellenic Council or the Interfraternity Council, she said. The four are considered the most demanding organizations on campus.

"I'm a very strong supporter of Greeks and Student Government. In order for residence halls to develop a proper atmosphere, however, we've got to have our people treating it as their top priority," Mitchell said.

The new clause will hold resident advisers accountable for their performance in the residence hall. "If problems arose, we would sit down with the individual and reevaluate priorities with them," Mitchell said.

"I would hope I could back my questions concerning their performances with evidence. A drop of grades and a lack of performance are key indicators of trouble. If talking with the student and allowing a probation period don't work, the end result could be dismissal."

"This is not just a room and board opportunity. If they, resident advisers, are here for that reason, time will tell. It's not the kind of job you work a few hours and leave," Mitchell said.

Faculty retirement accounts updated

In 1979, university payroll offices were behind in posting faculty and administration accounts on the Teacher Insurance Annuity Association retirement program.

But, according to Ray A. Nissen, director of personnel, those accounts are now current.

Faculty members must participate in one of two retirement programs available—the State Teachers Retirement System or TIAA.

Under the TIAA program, staff members contribute 6 percent of their salary and the state matches that contribution. Teacher retirement benefits are calculated on the basis of age at retirement, the number of years of service and an average of their five highest years' earnings.

Nissen cited two advantages of participating in the TIAA program.

Faculty and administration receive a tax shelter on the six percent contribution, and may invest an additional amount of up to 10 percent of their salaries.

Secondly, the TIAA program provides a supplement program, the College Retirement Equities Fund. Because TIAA is an insurance company, members' contributions are invested.

Nissen said faculty and administrators may split contributions so a portion of them go into the CREF fund. Money that is invested into CREF is used to purchase speculative stocks, Nissen said.

"CREF is a variable annuity. The amount you get each year varies by the stock market, so you can speculate," he said.

According to Nissen, investors can change the amount they invested in the CREF fund at any time. However, reports must go in every month so money may be invested. If the payroll offices are late in posting the accounts, interest is lost on money that should have been invested. This is where the problem occurred in 1979.

Nissen said it would be difficult to advise a staff member on which program to take.

"If a staff member can tell me their income, marital status and financial status on the day they plan to retire, then I can tell them which program to take," he said.

"The best tool I could have is the newspaper on the day they retire. Then, I would know what the economy would be like on that day."

Nissen said several states have their own retirement system, but "every public institution in West Virginia does it the same under the BOR."

Staff cars in good shape after freeze

By Jim Hooker

The cars, admittedly, are sometimes caked with dust blown from the construction site of the Cam Henderson Center. Two are presently indisposed due to body damage from accidents last spring.

The cars are Marshall's faculty, staff and student-use vehicles. Other than the dust and the sidelined cars, the fleet is in pretty good shape, according to Jay Neal, transportation supervisor.

The vehicles range in age from model year 1976 to 1980, with two 1981 subcompact models on order, according to Neal. The two new models, ordered through and put out to bid by the state, will replace two of the older models in accordance with state policy.

The new cars will be the first subcompacts in a fleet of full-sized cars. Subcompacts will continue to replace the full-sized models in the future, Harry Long, director of plant and administrative operations said.

The first priority for use of the cars, which are loaned on a request basis, is for off-campus teaching, Long said. He said requests for the cars are "primarily from faculty and staff." Long added that "whoever needs one (a car or a van) goes through their director or dean and we take it from there."

Although some of the cars are older and their odometers have turned the 100,000 mark they are kept in good shape and ride well, Neal said.

Asked about complaints to The Parthenon from persons who claimed that the cars were not safe to drive, Neal said these were not true. He added that any irregularities with a vehicle should be reported and that the persons who use the vehicles are made aware of this.

The cars, which must pass state inspection at an independent shop, did experience a rough period during the recent economic freeze, both Long and Neal said, they cited tires and other items that could not be purchased during that time.

"Fortunately at the same time purchases were frozen, travel was frozen also," Long said. "As soon as the freeze was lifted we ordered what parts we needed and made what repairs had to be made."

International students face multiple problems

By Michael Bailey

Coming to a new school can be a difficult enough experience, but coming to a new school in a new country can give one a double dip of uncertainty.

International students face this problem in all its ramifications while attending Marshall University, according to Judy Miller Assad, coordinator of international students' programs.

Three of the primary problems confronting international students are language, finances and a plethora of governmental regulations from both the United States and the student's home country.

"Language problems can be a real barrier for the students," Assad said.

Even though international students must pass an English proficiency test as a prerequisite for admission, they are still at somewhat of a disadvantage in competing with American students, Assad said.

Despite this, international students generally have high grade point averages, she said.

"International students are more highly motivated than domestic students," Assad added.

She attributes this to the much more involved process international students must go through to attend Marshall.

"Once they've made it this far (being admitted to Marshall), they don't want to waste the time spent here," Assad explained.

Another obstacle international students must face is their unique financial requirement. The students must have $5,500 on deposit at the financial aid office before they will be admitted.

"This represents the bare minimum needed to meet tuition and housing costs for the academic year," Assad said.

This stringent requirement, introduced in 1979, has reduced the number of international students at Marshall from about 350 a couple of years ago to roughly 200 now, Assad said.

It's a very difficult, sometimes impossible process to transfer that much money through international channels, Assad said. Countries such as India and Iran are particularly strict concerning international money transfers.

Assad spends much of her time "working on immigration red tape." This represents the tip of the iceberg of the third major problem confronting international students, governmental regulations.

Between U.S. paperwork and that required by the student's home country, Assad helps her students complete a variety of forms ranging from verification of student status to transferring to another school.

With the exception of some hard feelings and demonstrations associated with the Iranian crisis, there are seldom repercussions of international events directed at international students. Assad attributes this to both the good nature of Marshall students and their disinterest in international matters.

"Generally speaking, most students are abysmally ignorant of international affairs," Assad said.

"We'd like to be your church away from home!"

Senate election voting still controversial subject

Although Student Senate elections were two weeks ago, differing opinions of why there was a low voter turnout on election day are still a controversial subject.

Dr. Sam Clagg, chairman of the department of geography, said he felt the 4.8 percent eligible voter turnout was the cause of the differing interests among students.

In a Parthenon article last week, Student Body President Marc E. Williams said he felt students were apathetic to voting in the Student Senate elections.

However, in an unscientific survey conducted by Parthenon reporters, approximately 75 percent of 44 students polled said they didn't know enough about the candidates.

The newspaper ran several articles on the candidates of the senate elections. It could be the candidates didn't say anything the students felt was worth listening to.

We feel there are two reasons why such a small percentage of students went to the polls in the Oct. 1 senate elections.

We feel students are disinterested in the affairs of Student Government.

As Clagg remarked, "They're (the students) just enthusiastic about other things." Clagg's remark may justify why students seem to be disinterested in Student Government.

We also think the students don't necessarily believe Student government has as much power and influence as Williams claims the governmental body actually has.

Williams needs to realize his power and influence cannot be weighed by the amount of money the Student Government is allocated to appropriate or the number of projects it has completed. The power of Student Government can only be found through the support of the student body.

Nigerian complains of inadequate treatment

To the Editor:

When we accused The Parthenon last year of disinterestedness in the affairs of Nigerian students, (I hate to use the word discrimination) the paper devoted almost a quarter of a page to answer our charges and to inform its readers that lack of enough space is its main problem. It ignored other issues raised and dismissed our charges as an unjustified reaction to its earlier refusal of our demand to publish the names of our elected officers. The paper insisted that it only publishes or covers events that are of interest and importance to the Marshall community. We had no second chance to argue our case.

This year the event is not our annual election or the publication of the names of our elected officers. It was the 21st anniversary of the Nigerian independence, in fact our own version of July 4.

We invited The Parthenon and submitted an article that should briefly inform the Marshall community about Nigeria. The article was brushed under the rug and our invitation was not honored nor was the event covered by the paper. Perhaps, the event, in The Parthenon's judgement, was not of any importance to the Marshall community.

However, no matter the reasons The Parthenon may have, we must make our points. We consider ourselves as a part of Marshall community and in fact contribute our fair share to the publication of the paper. We are not a sorority and we do not organize annual rushes, events The Parthenon would readily give adequate coverage. Our national day is the only event we celebrate on the campus. If such an event that featured a guest speaker from a sovereign nation's embassy attracted the presence of the president of the university, attended by numerous faculty members, a representative of the city's mayor and other distinguished personalities in the community is not important and of interest to Marshall community in The Parthenon's consideration, one wonders the yardstick with which the paper measures interest and importance.

Certainly, we do not ask for special treatment from The Parthenon and at the same time we are not comfortable with differential treatment.

Thanks to WSAZ Channel 3 and The Herald-Dispatch who picked up what The Parthenon threw into its wastepaper basket.

'Student government retreat will bring unity'

By Brent Archer

Unity among Student Senators is the goal Student Body President Marc E. Williams hopes to achieve at the Student Government retreat this weekend.

"I hope it will bring us all together," Williams said. "It should help the senators become more aware of the issues and the work involved in Student Government."

The retreat, in its second year, will take place Friday and Saturday at Milhaven Village in Barboursville. Attendance by all senators is mandatory, Williams said.

Williams said the purpose of the retreat was to give those involved in Student Government an opportunity to get away from school and "concentrate on a few critical areas."

The senators will work in such areas as team building, goal planning, and improvement of weak points in Student Government.

Williams said the effectiveness of Student Government would be increased as a result of the interaction of the senators at the retreat.

"If you get to know someone on a personal level, you can work with them more effectively on a business level," he said.

Williams said this year's retreat will emphasize work rather than recreation.

"There will be more work than last year," he said. "Even the conversation outside the work sessions will be dominated by student affairs."

Williams said the most important accomplishment of last year's retreat was the development of The Sentinel, a Student Government newsletter.

"We decided at the retreat that there was a greater need for student awareness of Student Government, so we established The Sentinel," he said.

When the delegation returns to campus on Sunday, Williams said Student Government will have a structured plan for the year's projects.

"I hope to have a definite plan of the projects and concerns we're going to address for the remainder of the year," he said.

Williams said the retreat will cost about $200, which will be taken from the off-campus account maintained by Student Government.

Service charge on checks 'justified'

By Brent Archer

The proposal to place a 25-cent service charge on all checks cashed in the Memorial Student Center is justified, according to Marc E. Williams, student body president.

"I don't like it, but I see the reality of them having to do something," he said.

The proposal already has been approved by the Student Center Governing Board and will now be submitted to the Board of Regents for endorsement.

If the service charge is approved, the amount for which checks may be written will be raised from $15 to $20.

Williams said he thought that raising the money limit was ample compensation for the service charge.

Williams said the financial problems experienced by the student center made the service charge a necessity.

"They cannot afford to take extended losses," he said. "If they are going to continue to offer the service, they have to find some way to stop losing money."

Williams said the service charge was the only way to offset the increased workload caused by the large volume of checks being cashed in the student center this year.

"It's a convenience service that they're not making money on," he said. "The service charge is something we will have to absorb because there is no alternative."

Student Government will make no commitment on the proposal at this time, but would become involved if a large number of students voiced disapproval, Williams said.

"If the students were very upset, we would look into it," he said.

Red Cross is counting on you.

Herd in quest of snapping losing streak

By Patricia Proctor

The Thundering Herd will travel to Williamsburg Saturday in quest of a win over William and Mary, which would snap its four-game losing streak. Kick-off time at Cary Field is 1:30 p.m.

William and Mary also has a record of 1-4, picking up its first win last week, 12-7 over Dartmouth.

"They have been playing real good football teams, and last week they played somebody they could beat," Marshall head coach Sonny Randle said. "They are probably looking at their schedule and figuring they can win their next three games, and I hope we can prove them wrong on that."

Randle said the starting lineup for the Herd is undetermined at this point, except for the fact that Larry Fourqurean is slated to start at tailback. Regular quarterback Tony Konopka and last week's starter, Ted Carpenter, have been vying for the starting position this week in practice, he said. Fourqurean and Dickie Rollins were replaced in the tailback slots last week, and did not make the trip to UT-Chattanooga, but are expected to travel this weekend.

"This is a very important game for us and we'd like to have it in the worst possible way," Randle said. "It means an awful lot to us, because we need to halt this losing streak and if there is any way humanly possible, we'd like to do it this week and not wait until next."

"I'm expecting a pretty big win for us this Saturday," Fourqurean said. "We have been looking good in practice, and it is about time for us to win one. We're due for it."

Safety Carl Lee said he is also expecting a win for the Herd. "I think every one feels like we can win this one," he said. "William and Mary's record is not good, and we'll probably be the better team on the field."

Tony Scott said, "This could be our chance to win and break our four-game losing streak. We have had excellent practices all week, and we don't know who will start at quarterback, but Tony Konopka has had an excellent week of practice."

The Herd's loss to UT-Chattanooga dropped its record to 1-4 last weekend, but William and Mary coach Jimmy Laycock said he thinks Marshall is much better team than its record indicates.

"My concern about playing Marshall is that they are a better team than their record says they are, and they have potential for big plays," he said. "Their offense has potential for the big play because of the speed of the wide receivers and the backs, and the defense really concerns me."

"Marshall's defense is aggressive, they attack you, and will force something to happen. Those are the things that very much concern me," Laycock said.

He said William and Mary's players have had good practices this week, and that "the morale is really up after the first win last weekend."

The last time Marshall played William and Mary was in 1928. The game ended in a 0-0 tie.

Wide receiver Tony Stott, along with other members of the Herd, believes the team's four-game losing streak may come to an end this weekend. The Herd travels to William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va., to compete at 1:30 p.m. Saturday at Cary Field.

Inspiring thunder important to cheerleaders

By Andrea L. Billups

"Eat 'em up."
"Eat 'em up."
"Give 'em hell, Herd."

Every football and basketball season, 12 spirited men and women, dressed in green and white outfits, chant that familiar cheer with a crowd of screaming fans.

They are the Marshall University cheerleaders and they think their screaming, jumping and spirit-boosting job is important.

John E. Froendt, West Columbia senior and co-captain of this year's squad, thinks that the role of cheerleaders is "to get the students and fans involved in the game."

"The more spirit we show and the more support we give makes the team play better."

Froendt, who has been a cheerleader for three years, said although cheerleading takes up a lot of his time, he receives the fulfillment of supporting the team.

Froendt said he decided to become a cheerleader because he was "just trying to stay involved with sports and show some spirit for the university." He also thinks his role as a cheerleader is one of an ambassador for MU. "We represent this school with sportsmanship and spirit."

Beverly A. Peters, Charleston senior and captain of the squad, said she thinks there is a great need for cheerleaders at a university. "I don't think students get involved much. We're out there to motivate spirit and get the crowd behind the team."

Peters, who is an adult fitness major, pointed out that the job of cheerleading is one which is time consuming and physically demanding. "We practice three days a week for close to two hours and you've got to be in shape to stay energetic through the entire game."

A spectator in the crowd watches as a male cheerleader lifts his partner above his head with ease. However, Froendt admitted that it wasn't all that easy. "It takes an amount of strength. Mainly, I think it requires timing between partners."

Although she is happy with her job as an MU cheerleader, she said that "Marshall doesn't have any incentives for being a cheerleader."

"At other schools, there are partial and even full scholarships for cheerleaders," Peters said.

Peters said she thinks cheerleading can be compared to sports. "A lot of squads train and have physical requirements. I compare it to sports because I devote as much time to it as any athlete would. We put in more time than a team would, because we cheer all year long, not just one season."

Peters said she thinks there will always be a need for cheerleaders, and the quality of cheerleading at Marshall is improving. "I think they will build on to the squad rather than get rid of it."

During the summer, the cheerleaders attended the Universal Cheerleaders Association Camp at Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, Va. Of the 72 squads attending, including "Big 10" squads from Ohio State and Indiana, Marshall won the "Spirit Award."

Marshall also received several blue ribbons for daily competitions during their week-long stay.

Although they have received awards from their cheering peers, they receive little acclaim from fans and students. Why would they put forth so much time, energy and effort for such little recognition?

Peters put it like this, "It's still an honor for me to be a cheerleader. I feel like I'm getting involved and supporting the team. While I'm going to school, being a cheerleader makes me feel like I'm doing something."

Morehead State is next on Herd list

Harriers' five-year dual streak on line

By Mike Graham

A five-year unbeaten streak is quite an achievement to put on the line.

But that's what the Marshall cross country team will be doing Saturday morning when they go up against Morehead State in a dual meet at Morehead, Ky.

The Thundering Herd has not lost a dual meet since October 1976 when Ohio University edged them in a meet at Huntington. They have won 16 straight since then.

The Herd finished seventh last week among 14 teams in the Appalachian State Invitational at Boone, N.C.

"We showed signs of improvement at Appalachian," Rod O'Donnell, the cross country coach at Marshall for seven years, said.

"Our first two runners, Dave Henry and Mike Dodge, ran well," he said. "Mike had our third fastest time on that course ever and Dave ran our fifth fastest time there ever."

Dodge, Wheeling sophomore, finished sixth with a 31:41 time over 10,000-meters and Henry, Fairfield, Ohio, senior, placed 10th with a 31:50 time.

Roy Poloni, Milton, Ontario, freshman, finished 32nd; John Warnock, Georgetown, Ontario, freshman, 46th; and Keith Brown, Columbus, Ohio, freshman, 68th.

Also going to Morehead will be Verland Perry, Kenova sophomore, and Karl Egnatoff, Huntington freshman.

"I think it's a matter of pride," he said of the 16 consecutive dual meet victories. "It means a lot to the kids. Compared to the Southern Conference meet it means nothing. But it is a pride and satisfaction thing for them and myself."

Marshall will run in only one more race before the conference championship. That will be against Ohio University and Virginia Tech, Oct. 24 at Athens, Ohio.

Spikers' foes strong

By Colette Fraley

"We can do well, if we play up to our abilities," volleyball coach Linda Holmes said.

As the team, 8-22, travels to Dayton, Ohio, today to play in the Wright State Invitational, Holmes said she "can only look at it positively."

She said all of the nine teams involved in the tournament are strong, but she thinks the competition level will help MU.

"Whenever you play teams of this caliber, it makes you play up to their level," she said. "That should help us."

In MU's bracket for the tournament are Morehead State University, to whom Marshall has already lost this season; University of Illinois-Chicago Circle, which also has defeated MU this season; Wright State, which won the regionals last year and went to the national championships; and Northern Michigan, which MU has never played.

"We've never played them (NMU), but I'd venture to say that any team which is in this tournament is a very good, very strong team," Holmes said.

"We hope to play up to our maximum capabilities," she said. "You can't play marginally against these teams and expect to win. They simply won't allow it."

The Marshall lady golfers round out their fall schedule this week in the Lady Kat Fall Invitational at Lexington, Ky.

Team members making the trip are Tammie Green, Somerset, Ohio, senior; Jennifer Graff, Philadelphia senior; Peggy Freeman, Louisville, Ky., senior; Fran James, Durham, N.C., sophomore and Jackie Fellingner, Niagara Falls, Ontario, sophomore.

The tournament begins on Friday and concludes on Saturday.

Soccer team is searching for first conference victory

By Sara Crickenberger

Marshall University's soccer team will travel to Davidson Saturday in quest of its first Southern Conference victory this season.

The team, which is 0-3-1 in conference competition this season, will play a second conference game at East Tennessee State on Sunday.

Marshall's team, which has a 4-7-1 overall record, was beaten by both teams last year.

"Davidson is one of the better teams in the Southern Conference, East Tennessee is not," Coach Sam Hood said. "I'd like to have a good showing against Davidson and we're going to East Tennessee to win. Winning at Davidson is going to take a lot of effort, but it is not out of the question."

Knee injuries have put Phil Meyer, starting fullback, out for the rest of the season. Halfback Paul Boykin did not travel to Morehead on Monday and it is questionable whether he will play this weekend, Hood said.

"On a team this size, anytime anyone gets hurt it is catastrophic," Hood said. "It's a big problem."

Freshman Andy Zulauf will attempt to break the record for goals in a single season. With seven goals, he is only one away from the Marshall record.

Zulauf already holds the record of seven assists and 21 total points in one season.

Marshall, which is 0-6-0 on the road, will play its final away games this weekend. The three remaining games with University of Tennessee at Chattanooga on Oct. 24, Ohio University on Oct. 28 and Western Carolina on Nov. 1 will be played at home.
